Free live football tv free sports streaming sites

There's only one game left in the college football season, but that numbers have to be doozy. And you won't have to miss a minute if you have the right streaming app or service. (File credit: Jamie Lamor Thompson/Shutterstock) After three dozen bowl games have filled the calendar between the half-December and New Year's Day, we're left with Alabama defending its national title against Clemson in a College Football Championship game this Monday (Jan. 7) from Santa Clara, California. The action starts at 8 .m. ET. And you don't necessarily have to be near the TV to see if the Crimson Tide or Tigers come out on top. The rise of mobile apps and streaming services means you no longer need to stay glued to your TV just to see your favorite college football teams in action. Burn the network mobile app that transfers your game of your choice - or, if you don't have a cable, your favorite streaming service, and you can watch every last tackle and touchdown. How to watchAs we're talking about a national championship game, make sure you have access to ESPN. The self-proclaimed world leader in sport broadcasts Monday night's championship. The easiest way to watch a big game is to burn the WatchESPN app, which is available for both Android and iOS. The ESPN streaming app also works with Amazon Fire TV, Apple TV, Chromecast, PlayStation 4, Roku and Xbox One. But there's a catch that even a top-of-the-line receiver would find daunting: You'll need to sign in with credentials from a cable provider to stream both games, so cable cutters will have to go the other way. And this route is an over-the-top streaming service. Fortunately, all the big players - DirecTV Now, Hulu Live, PlayStation Vue, Sling TV and YouTube TV - include ESPN in their packages. Prices start at $25 a month for the Sling TV Orange package, which includes ESPN. Elsewhere, you'll pay $40 to $45 for a package that includes access to ESPN. Fubo.TV doesn't include any of ESPN's channels, and with a national championship broadcast there, that's a big miss. Four of the five streaming services listed above offer free seven-day trials (PlayStation Vue is the exception, for five days). So in theory you could start the process during which the January 7 championship starts and cancels soon after. When to watchHere is when you can catch the remaining bowls of the game. Several sports leagues have taken note, offering streaming services to fans who want to watch games on their computer, set-top box, game console, or mobile device. Sadly, college football is a little behind the times, lacking a comprehensive Game Pass as the NFL has. Yet there are several legitimate ways to stream NCAA games (and far less legitimate ways for the more unscrupulous among us). Streaming options and other information ESPN's online streaming service includes all sports network shows, including college football. The service requires users to have ESPN as part of their cable subscription, but it's a comprehensive service that lets you watch games on pretty much any device through apps or websites. In addition to games, WatchESPN also includes programs such as SportsCenter. ESPN has a similar app available on Xbox One. In addition to streaming games and clips, the ESPN app on XBOX also includes fantasy football features that allow users to watch their matchups and score on screen. Part of CBS's advanced media collective, College Sports Live does exactly what the name suggests, providing live streaming of various college games. College Sports Live provides access to all CBS game covers, as well as other content such as press conferences and news pieces. CSL is available on computers as well as iOS and Android devices. This requires a subscription starting at $10/month, but unlike WatchESPN you don't need a cable or satellite subscription. For those who can't afford a pay TV service, College Sports Live is a much cheaper alternative to ESPN. Reddit hobby forums (subreddits, in place of jargon) are generally a great place for fans of any subject to gather and share information, and the college football subreddit (r/CFB) is no exception. Fans of the sport can find everything they need here: articles, discussions, highlights. This subreddit is also a good place to find game plans and links to streams (legal or otherwise). Pirate Streams Services provided by ESPN and CBS require subscriptions of some kind, and they won't necessarily have every game. For those who find even these services too uncomfortable or expensive, it is not difficult to find unlicensed streams online. Such currents are legally (and ethically) dubious. Broadcasters like ESPN pay a lot of money for the rights to show football, and neither they nor the NCAA are happy with the pirate streams. Still, they're there if anyone wants to. Many of these sites are hosted in other countries, further muddying the waters as they apply intellectual property laws. Online football forums like the above subreddit are generally a good place to find them. Be warned: the life of digital banditry is fraught with danger. Many of these site sites bombard you with pop-up ads, and some even try to make you install malware (maybe there may be honor among thieves, but certainly not on the internet). Always be careful on sites demanding you install programs. In general, if your computer can play Youtube videos, it can probably load the stream without additional software. The advice of editors cutting cable is not too difficult if you watch the sport, in which case it is a nightmare. Huh989 over at Hackerspace wants to know: how do you stream sports, and are sports packages out there worth it? Cable TV is insanely expensive, and with all the cheap video services out there, it's easy to cut...
